REPORT OF THE TECHNICAL COMMITTEE (TC) 2012 GUANGZHOU INTERNATIONAL AWARD FOR URBAN INNOVATION

CHINA HOTEL, GUANGZHOU, CHINA, 15-17 OCTOBER 2012

I. INTRODUCTION

The TC met in Guangzhou from 15 to 17 October 2012 to select outstanding and deserving initiatives with a view to enhancing the implementation of sustainable urban development through inspiration and knowledge sharing. It took into consideration the goal of the Guangzhou International Award for Urban Innovation (Guangzhou Award) to reward innovations in improving the social, economic and environmental sustainability in cities and local governments worldwide and more specifically:

- To highlight exemplary models of innovative policies and practices;
- To motivate cities and local authorities to further promote innovation;
- To improve city governance.

The TC took also into consideration the objectives of the City of Guangzhou to promote the sharing of lessons learned from outstanding initiatives on urban innovation between cities, regions, countries and thematic areas.

The TC wishes to express its appreciation to the City of Guangzhou, the United Cities and Local Government (UCLG) and Metropolis for their vision in establishing the Guangzhou International Award for Urban Innovation. It wishes to thank the City of Guangzhou and for its generous hospitality to the TC. The TC commends the secretariat for the Guangzhou Award in the way it handled the call for submissions, the transparency in its guidelines and processes. It further commends the City of Guangzhou for its intention of organising the first International Seminar on Learning from Excellence using the finalists for the Award as living practices. Such a seminar will go a long way to promoting the transfer of knowledge, expertise and experience.

The TC reviewed all 255 initiatives submitted from 153 cities and from 56 countries and regions. The TC concurred with the suggestions of the Secretariat to classify 35 submissions as non-qualifiers for various reasons including non-compliance to the reporting format and irrelevance of the subject matter. The remaining 220 initiatives were deemed as qualifying for further processing.

Of these 220 initiatives, 45 were identified as outstanding initiatives, proportionate to number of qualifying submissions by region. It further selected 15 submissions of excellence considered of comparable merit as the shortlist of initiatives to be submitted to the Jury for its consideration and final selection of 5 award-winning initiatives.

II. The Evaluation Process

The TC assessed each submission using the main criteria established by the Guangzhou Award for Urban Innovation namely:

- Innovativeness: the extent to which and the use of knowledge of information has been applied in developing new policies, practices and/or business models to address major urban issues and challenges;

- Effectiveness: the extent to which the initiative has achieved or is well on its way to achieve its stated objective(s) and other socially desirable outcomes;
- Replicability: the value of the initiative in inspiring others to adopt new ideas, policies or practices, including replication in other locations of the city, region or country for greater impact and sustainability;
- Significance: the importance of the initiative in addressing problems of public concern.

III. Selection Procedure for the Short-listed Initiatives

In its first plenary session, the TC divided into two groups (A and B). Each group reviewed about half of the submissions on a regional basis with a view to determining the most compelling initiatives. The work of the two groups resulted in a consolidated list of 45 deserving initiatives. These deserving initiatives are contained in Annex I.

In its second plenary session, the members of the TC re-organised into two groups (C and D) with the purpose of identifying 15 outstanding initiatives known as the “shortlist”. Those common to both lists were unanimously admitted to short list. Those that were not common to both lists were discussed in plenary resulting in a final shortlist of 15 initiatives based on consensus.

The final short list of outstanding initiatives is contained in Annex II.

The TC prepared a brief for each short-listed initiative to inform the Jury of the rationale of its selection. These briefs are also contained in Annex II.

IV. Recommendations of the TC to the Secretariat

During the conduct of the appraisal process, members of the TC made the following observations, comments and recommendations to improve the Guangzhou Award process, as follows:

1. The TC noted that there were few submissions showing innovative approaches to economic development and employment at the city level notwithstanding the current economic “crisis” affecting many parts of the world. This may require an attempt to reach out to appropriate networks to help identify such initiatives.
2. The TC noted certain regional gaps and suggests that some of these gaps could be overcome by approaching the appropriate associations or networks;
3. That the format of the submission be comprised of two parts: one part describing the policy, strategy and/or vision of the city, and the second part comprised of initiatives or projects being implemented by the city and/or its partners that best illustrate the innovation.
4. The format of the submission form should be improved by requesting the submitters to fill in a summary sheet of not more than 400 words
5. The TC feels that the submissions constitute a valuable knowledge capital and should be disseminated as widely as possible through a web-based platform which would enable cities to update their initiatives and new ones to register initiatives. This could be done in partnership with universities or other third parties.

6. The TC appreciates the clarity and the simplicity of the criteria and recommends that they be maintained.
